THE WILTON ASSAULT.

Mr Houghton's Condition Pronounced Fatal—Man Arrested on Suspicion

FARMINGTON, Dec. 21. H. S Houghton, of Wilton, who was assaulted on the way home Saturday night, remains in a very precarious condition and is not able to converse at all about the affair. It is doubtful if he lives.

Mrs Houghton saw a man run between the house from the front of the house and he saw her husband was fought but thought nothing of it at the time. In a few moments she heard groans from somebody and went to the house and going out found her husband as before stated. She now says she thinks it was her husband's assailant who ran away.

Search was directed toward a wood chopper living in Jay who was at Wilton that evening and on Sunday hired a team to come for Norridgewock to visit his brother, he said, who was sick. Officer Pike and Mr Lowell started in pursuit.

It is just learned they have returned with a man, who gives the name of Moore.

Our Light and Guide.

BY J. H. M.

Bright light whose beams mid darkness shone
Splendor and joy of ancient days,
From Bethlehem a lovely star still flows
The beauty of thy golden rays

As thy glad beams increasant shine
Through sinful years of sombre night,
False ancient systems we behold
Slow fading in thy morning light

And through the flood of flowing years,
As brighter fall thy blissful rays,
The paths of weary feet are lit
By thee sweet Star of ancient days

Our hearts do glow with love and joy
As we the distant past survey
When on a slumbering world of sin
Dawned bright this blissful Christmas day

When out and distant, shining spheres
Through you calm field of ether far
Angelic anthems sweetly rang
In lovely strains from star to star

To lonely plains where shepherds dwelt
Down to this sin benighted earth,
Came radiant forms from sinless world
To celebrate the holy birth

The wise men saw the glorious star
And in its beauteous beams were led
Over hills and valleys from afar
Unto the lowly manger bed

So may we all in faith be led
As by that star a wandering light
Unto the plains of love and birth
Where Heaven and Earth are met to night

His love in light and beauty gleams
Throughout creation a wondrous plan
All change the goodness underlies
And all is for the good of man

So tale of mythic lore is He
Nor fable old nor ancient dream
His glories mid the fleeting years
In richer brighter radiance gleam

Praise from His whole creation flows
From sympathetic hearts of love
Whate'er their name or creed He smiles
On all and gently from above

In cabins mid the lowly hills
Where little children poor may be
His loving hand is bearing gifts to all
From up rich in ten Christmas tree

Thus shall His radiant changeless light
Our guide through future ages be
To less fair in the lowly path
Of all His sweet humility

By JOHN STRANGE WINTER.

"—No—let us hope for the best. Don't think of that, the little man cried almost beside himself with distress. While there's life there's hope you know my dear and they are both young and strong—not like our dear old friend who went away from us yesterday but young men in the very flower of their strength. The chances are a thousand to one in their favor but I'll go along at once my dear and then your mind will be more at rest about them" and off the good hearted little man went and Nancy was once more left alone.

There was a great deal for her to do naturally but it was really only in the way of giving orders. The family solicitor came as soon as he received the news of Mr Earle's death and all the weight of arranging for the funeral and the other business fell upon him.

The day wore slowly away but Sir George did not return with news from Burmah. Then Darby brought in the evening papers and Nancy saw from the expression of his face that the worst had happened to one or both out at the front. Which is it Darby? she asked faintly feeling a deadly numbness stealing over her.

Miss Earle, he said very gently "you are the last of the name now. Mr Stuart only lived a few hours after they got him into camp.

And Mr—Beresford? Nancy whispered.

No mention of him ma'am, the servant answered, so he is alive at all events, and then he put the paper into her hand and pointed to the place where he would find what she wished to see.

It was so short, cruelly short as war despatches always seem to those who are the most keenly interested, just saying that Lieut. Stuart Earle and one private of the Blankshire regiment had died [illegible] after reaching camp of wounds received in an engagement with Dacoits on the [illegible]

And there was not a single word about the conduct in or fate of Lieut. James Beresford. However in a certain sense there was relief in the very fact at all events he was not dead, so that there was a chance for him yet.

She had to wait a long time or what seemed so to her poor girl before she got any definite news about him for although the papers contained various short dispatches he was not mentioned in any of them.

Still no news was good news and at last Sir George St. Leger came to her in triumph with a telegram which had come by various stages right from the fountain head.

May Seton to Sir George St. Leger. Earle died almost immediately after receiving Lancet. Beresford badly wounded in head and arm but is going on very well. If no fever every chance of his getting through it. Will wire to you if there is any important change.

And after this Nancy had no choice but to wait down and wait. Still she was not sad; could not be idle for there was much to be done. The putting of a large house in mourning, the hearing and appearing to arrangements for a funeral which was almost a public one of the melancholy journey down to Earles Hope, the ordering of baked meats and so on for the many who would attend it, the answering of letters, the receiving and arranging of the dozens of wreaths and other remembrances of flowers which came from far and near to show the affection and respect in which the old man had been held, all these offices fell upon her.

Then the day before that of the funeral came and early in the afternoon they went down to Earles Hope and the last of the Earles was carried into the house of his forefathers for the last time. Yes the last of the Earles after all, for young Stuart had been dead already some hours when the news of the engagement in which he had been wounded reached his father and sister. So the long sad evening wore away, and the following day, amid blinding snow the lengthy procession passed from hall to graveyard, and Nancy the one who had never been of any account before was the only Earle left of all the proud old race who had ruled at Earles Hope for many and many a year.

She was the last of them all, the owner of that wide estate, of all their great rent roll, she was the sole mistress of everything around, free and unencumbered to do exactly as she chose—to come and go as she liked—to remain an Earle to the end of her days, or to wed with whom she pleased.

And Jim Beresford, the man she loved most in all the wide world, was lying at that moment hovering between life and death on the other side of the globe lying in discomfort and misery to endure the cruel torture of ghastly wounds inflicted by the weapons of Burmese Dacoits—a startling instance of the irony of fate.

It was several days after Nancy had returned to town that Sir George came to her, in something like triumph, with a dispatch, or more correctly a telegram, from Maj Seton.

"Great news, my dear—great news!" he said.

And so it was. For it told that, after a sharp attack of fever, Beresford had taken a decided turn for the better, and if he went on as he gave every promise at that time of doing, he would be moved homeward in about a fortnight or so. By homeward he meant to say that they would get him down to Calcutta, where he would be able to have more comforts and a better chance of recovery.

"Sir George," said Nancy suddenly, "I am going out to Calcutta by the next steamer."

"Alone, my dear!" asked the little man, somewhat in dismay.

"Oh no, I shall take servants with me; but I shall go."

"And you will be married out there!"

"It is very likely."

"But you cannot go alone."

"Oh! yes. Mrs Seton is there. I shall go to her. If not, there are plenty of other people who will be friendly to me. Any way, he is ill, and must want me—and I am going."

CHAPTER XXXI

TOGETHER.

For perhaps the first time in all the twenty two years of her life, there was apparent in Nancy Earle's behavior a spice of that daredevil, headstrong self will which had sent her younger brother to his ruin! And having made up her mind to go out to Calcutta, and yet further to reach her Beautiful Jim's side if he didn't happen to be there she did not let the grass grow under her feet, but set about making her preparations at once for the journey.

In vain did Sir George St. Leger represent to her that for a young unmarried lady of great personal attractions to undertake so long and so formidable a journey was a very, very serious matter—that the world would look upon such a proceeding as altogether out of the common, and—

"But it is out of the common" said Nancy, looking straight at him with her wonderful clear dove's eyes. "I am going to be married to Mr Beresford very soon and he has been very severely wounded. He must have the most dire need of me."

"But people will think it altogether so odd" the little man persisted.

"The Earles have never troubled themselves much about what people might think" said Nancy rather proudly. "As to my going out there I know he would approve of that; and besides you know I am not going out to strangers. Mrs Seton is in Calcutta and I am going straight to her."

"But supposing she has left it when you get there!"

"I shall telegraph to her at once. If she has to leave before I get there she will have made the way smooth for me, never fear."

Then Sir George gave up the conflict, seeing that Nancy was proving herself to be a real chip of the old Earle block and that he was but wasting his breath in arguing with her.

"I might be walking down the street," she cried, "and a chimney pot might fall on my head and crack it, or I might miss my footing at the top of the stairs and tumble down and break my neck, or I might with a sudden change of tone. "I might stop here and eat my heart out, and he might die without seeing me—and oh! Mr Moore don't try to keep me. I should go right out of my mind if anything like that were to happen."

So she won the day and carried her point and the preparations for the journey went briskly on. She decided to take her maid, who had been with her three years and was a very steady, reliable kind of woman, well accustomed to traveling, and also to keep Darby who had been her father's valet for something like four times that period. With her own woman and with Darby she would she knew be more safe and also travel in greater comfort than with half a dozen fine society ladies to do chaperon. And moreover she gave a thought to the journey back and to the comfort and help that Darby would be to her Beautiful Jim on the voyage home. And with such indomitable energy did she work that by the time the very next P and O steamer went out to the shining East she was on board feeling it is true a little more lonely than she would for all the world have admitted to the group of friends who had gone to see her off—waving a rather tearful farewell to them and her native shores.

Be Sure

If you have made up your mind to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to take any other. A Boston lady who once was in worthy institution tells her experience below.

In one store you can't get [illegible] Hood's Sarsaparilla [illegible] but if you buy Hood's Sarsaparilla you will find it [illegible] and last longer, than it might [illegible]

To Get

[illegible] that thrill I'd [illegible] I need not [illegible] more, etc. But I will not pay it [illegible] change. [illegible] Hood's Sarsaparilla [illegible] was satisfied with it and didn't want any other. When [illegible] Hood's Sarsaparilla [illegible] I was feeling great [illegible] with dyspepsia, and at work that at times I could hardly stand. I looked like a person in consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me so much good that I wonder at myself sometimes, and my friends frequently speak of it." Miss ELLA A. GOFF, 61 Terrace Street, Boston.
